Introduction

Our Master's degree program in Mathematics covers all areas of pure and applied mathematics represented at the Department of Mathematics at Hamburg University.

The programme takes two years. You will begin by attending lecture courses and seminars at increasingly advanced levels, and finish with a piece of genuine mathematical research, your Master's thesis. In choosing your topics from our wide range of courses you will be very flexible, but we shall advise you on how to focus your studies in a way that best suits your interests and abilities. You will be integrated into the research activities at the department as early as possible. Having received a Master's degree, you may apply for admission to PhD studies. The scientific environment for PhD studies in Mathematics benefits from the Research Training Group 2583 - Modeling, Simulation and Optimization of Fluid Dynamic Applications (<https://www.c3s.uni-hamburg.de/rtg2583.html>) and other activities.
